

What is an explosive atmosphere?

An explosive atmosphere results from a mixture of inflammable substances in the form of gas, vapours, fog or dust with air in such proportions that excessive temperature, an electrical arc, spark or any other energy ignition source produces an explosion (the danger really exists).